Old Record Book Holds Church Story

Renice Curtis of Tracy City says she felt a strange compulsion to transcribe her great-grandfather's century-old church journal the moment she laid eyes on it. She's not sure why. Perhaps so others could read his month-by-month account of those who made up the congregation of Fall Creek Primitive Baptist Church.

"Great-grandfather did his task by keeping the church record book," Renice said recently. "Now, I feel like I've done my task. I don't really know why. Maybe someday I will."

It wouldn't be hard, you'd think, to transcribe the writings of 104 years ago. Dykes was, after all, a Tennessean and English was his native tongue.

But C.H. (or Calhoon as he was called) wasn't a great speller. That and his fancy, flowing script made the record somewhat hard to read. Renice says she was able to make out most of the words in her mimeographed copy of his books, but had to underline several to show she wasn't sure they are correct.

"He was well-educated in the basics of that time," she adds, "but he spelled many words phonetically."

"While working with this I began to feel a warm closeness toward great-grandfather, as a human being and not just someone who lived long ago," she says. "Sometimes I wish I could have known him. In some ways, I do. My father, his grandson, is much like him I think."

Calvin Calhoon (C.H.) Dykes was the son of Sanders and Jane Lockhart Dykes. He was born Aug. 24, 1842, in Warren County and died Sept. 16, 1929, in Marion County.

C.H. married Nellie Birch Colston, 17-year-old daughter of Alexander (Alex) and Abbie Myers Colston, Oct. 13, 1861, when he was just 19. Nellie, known as Aunt Ellie to most, was called Ellender by her husband. She died Feb. 2, 1928.

Calhoon and Ellender reared their family of 13 children in Dykes' Hollow near the Marion-Grundy county line, and descendants still

Church near Tracy City where he was elected moderator in 1888.

The Baptists joined with Methodists in the area to construct a common building they used for services on alternate Sundays. Ironically, the reason given for excluding a lady from church membership in March 1878, according to Dykes' records, was for "joining the Methodist Church and also joining the Masons."

The Primitive Baptist conference took the matter of her expulsion under consideration for several months before making a decision.

C.H. preached at Orange Hill Church on his congregation's Sundays, and at Brown's Hollow school house on alternate sabbaths.

"A modern building now stands just behind where the original church stood," Renice notes. "It's still shared on alternate Sundays by Baptist and Methodist congregations."

"C.H., his wife Ellender, and many of their kin rest in the little cemetery near the church," she adds.

Articles of faith for the Primitive Baptist Church at Fall Creek consisted of 10 points beginning with, "We believe in a true and everlasting God, the Father's Word, and the Holy Spirit."

The articles (later adopted by the Orange Hill congregation) also pointed out "the only true route of faith and practice is the Word of God as found in the Old and New Testaments, and the true mode of baptism is immersion."

Rules of decorum for the church called for all meetings to open with prayer (divine worship). The 14th and last rule noted that "no member shall absent himself from his church meetings more than twice without it coming under the notice of the church."

When this happened, it was reported in the minutes, and a committee sent to talk to the member to find out why he had been absent. A letter usually was sent, after a reasonable

Sanders Dykes made a motion, seconded by David Tate, that some action be taken. It was decided to send a committee to talk to the hapless fellow "in love, not in anger."

The same man was charged in July with leaving his wife, and having slanderous talk about her, and for not attending his church meetings. He was excluded from membership in August.

Notes for most of the meetings discussed in Dykes' record book concern those who joined the church and were baptized. It's also a record of letters written to those who needed a nudge to comply with rules of baptism, and those who were "lettered out" or excluded from church membership.

In January 1876, four members asked for their letters and left the church. No notes are available for November 1876 to May 1877, but when the conference met again, two members were lettered off. The following July, two more were expelled for non-attendance.

There were no repents at the November 1878 meeting, and none when the group met again in March 1879. However, there was a reference in July against a brother who got mad at the church. His grievance was continued from term to term for one reason or another. Rumors flew in the settlement that he was cursing and swearing, and since he "had not come up to-gospel terms" by the October meeting, action was taken to exclude him.

The biggest move from membership came in October 1883 when letters were granted to Elenander Meax, David W. Meax, Mary Meax, Julian Lockhart, T.B. Sweeton, Cathrine Sweeton, Mtishia Sweeton, Mary Sweeton, Jane Sweeton, C.H. Dykes, Ellender Dykes and S.P. Cope, who left to begin an independent church near Tracy City.

Notes from this point on concern the new Orange Hill Church with Brother G.P. Moffitt and William McGlothlin, from the old church, as presbytry. McGlothlin also was

TENNESSEE CIVIL WAR VETERANS QUESTIONNAIRES

Veterans of the Civil War have long been dead, and with their passing went stories and memories of people and places . . . memories of lives offered for their homeland. This book, TENNESSEE CIVIL WAR VETERANS QUESTIONNAIRES, helps to preserve some of this history. It is the publication of responses to questionnaires that were sent to Tennessee Civil War veterans in 1914-1915 by Dr. Gus Dyer and again in 1920 by John Trotwood Moore. Veterans who responded included not only those who served in Tennessee units and were still living in Tennessee at the time of the survey, but also Tennessee veterans living in other states . . . and some men who enlisted in other states and who had moved to Tennessee by the time of the survey.

These interviewed veterans came from all social classes, and their answers varied from short and barely literate annals of the poor farmer to perceptive assessment of pre-war social conditions and detailed autobiographies of well-educated sons of planters, artisans and merchants. This cross-section of human experience makes the material useful to historians (for whose purposes it was created), as well as to the genealogist pursuing information about lives of specific ancestors.

These questionnaires have been transcribed and edited by Colleen Morse Elliott and Louise Armstrong Moxley of Fort Worth, Texas, and it has taken more than five years to get them ready for the printer.

Old Record Book Holds Church Story

Renice Curtis of Tracy City says she felt a strange compulsion to transcribe her great-grandfather's century-old church journal the moment she laid eyes on it. She's not sure why. Perhaps so others could read his month-by-month account of those who made up the congregation of Fall Creek Primitive Baptist Church.

"Great-grandfather did his task by keeping the church record book," Renice said recently. "Now, I feel like I've done my task. I don't really know why. Maybe someday I will."

It wouldn't be hard, you'd think, to transcribe the writings of 104 years ago. Dykes was, after all, a Tennessean and English was his native tongue.

But C.H. (or Calhoon as he was called) wasn't a great speller. That and his fancy, flowing script made the record somewhat hard to read. Renice says she was able to make out most of the words in her mimeographed copy of his books, but had to underline several to show she wasn't sure they are correct.

"He was well-educated in the basics of that time," she adds, "but he spelled many words phonetically."

"While working with this I began to feel a warm closeness toward great-grandfather, as a human being and not just someone who lived long ago," she says. "Sometimes I wish I could have known him. In some ways, I do. My father, his grandson, is much like him I think."

Calvin Calhoon (C.H.) Dykes was the son of Sanders and Jane Lockhart Dykes. He was born Aug. 24, 1842, in Warren County and died Sept. 16, 1929, in Marion County.

C.H. married Nellie Birch Colleston, 17-year-old daughter of Alexander (Alex) and Abbie Myers Colleston, Oct. 13, 1861, when he was just 19. Nellie, known as Aunt Ellie to most, was called Ellender by her husband. She died Feb. 2, 1928.

Calhoon and Ellender reared their family of 13 children in Dykes' Hollow near the Marion-Grundy county line, and descendants still

Church near Tracy City where he was elected moderator in 1888.

The Baptists joined with Methodists in the area to construct a common building they used for services on alternate Sundays. Ironically, the reason given for excluding a lady from church membership in March 1878, according to Dykes' records, was for "joining the Methodist Church and also joining the Masons."

The Primitive Baptist conference took the matter of her expulsion under consideration for several months before making a decision.

C.H. preached at Orange Hill Church on his congregation's Sundays, and at Brown's Hollow school house on alternate sabbaths.

"A modern building now stands just behind where the original church stood," Renice notes. "It's still shared on alternate Sundays by Baptist and Methodist congregations."

"C.H., his wife Ellender, and many of their kin rest in the little cemetery near the church," she adds.

Articles of faith for the Primitive Baptist Church at Fall Creek consisted of 10 points beginning with, "We believe in a true and everlasting God, the Father's Word, and the Holy Spirit."

The articles (later adopted by the Orange Hill congregation) also pointed out "the only true route of faith and practice is the Word of God as found in the Old and New Testaments, and the true mode of baptism is immersion."

Rules of decorum for the church called for all meetings to open with prayer (divine worship). The 14th and last rule noted that "no member shall absent himself from his church meetings more than twice without it coming under the notice of the church."
